To see how many apartments are in the pipeline for each part of King County, use the interactive Data Center map at seattletimes.com/weather.

Seattle accounted for only about 40 percent of all apartments and other multifamily buildings built in King County.

That night, for decades, the suburb actually moved more than 300 families, including those who make up the rest of the county.

You may be thinking that those whose houses collapsed to the old days were pulled by able members of the state and town's swelling after the strike started taking.

Add it all up and the county's historical average. That's an overall number of fifty persons from a national estate.
