Tardy deterrent: ‘Armada’ was nowhere near N. Korea

CARRIER HAD PREVIOUS DATE
Administration says glitches led to false story of U.S. show of force

WASHINGTON — A week ago, the Trump administration declared that ordering a U.S. aircraft carrier into the Sea of Japan would send a powerful deterrent to North Korea and give President Donald Trump an oppor-tunity in responding to the North’s provoc-ative behavior. “We’re sending an armada,” Trump told Fox News.

The problem was that the carrier, the USS Carl Vinson, and the three other warships in its strike force were more than 3,500 miles southwest of the Korean Peninsula — a far cry from the impressive display of the military’s Pacific Command to an astonished explanation by Defense Secretary Jim Mattis, all of which perpetuated the false story that a fleet was racing toward the

By MARK LANDLER AND ERIC SCHMITT

The New York Times

19 APRIL 2017

Tardy deterrent: ‘Armada’

The “Armada” that President Trump announced a week ago was nowhere near Korea as the waters were being calmed by his message.

After 11th DUI arrest, Renton man is called ‘grave danger’

By RACHEL LERMAN

The Seattle Times staff reporter

Dean Hermsen was first arrested for driving under the influence (DUI) in 1984, according to court records.

Early Friday, the now-59-year-old Renton man was arrested.

He’s been charged with 11 DUIs since.

The man is called "grave danger" in court records.

The "Buy American and Hire American" order directs U.S. agencies to propose rules

The tech industry has long said it relies

H-1B order may benefit local tech companies

Trump seeks to tighten rules

Changes could mean more visas for major industry leaders and founders for outsourcing firms

By JESSICA LEE

The Seattle Times staff reporter

H-1B visas are hot tickets for top tech talent.

It does signal tighter enforcement of visa adjudication abroad, but that may end up working in favor of local tech companies.

For dinner in minutes, use salsa to add heat

Four tips Dorothy Downes, who commutes from Skagit County to Seattle, plays the instrument while stopped on Interstate 5.

Seattle Tech companies stand to benefit from tightened enforcement of immigration laws.

The “Buy American and Hire American” order signed by Trump will put pressure on the tech industry.

The tech industry is trying to prevent visa changes.

Seattle Times

Western Washington University

Dorothy Downes, a registered nurse.

The state Department of Corrections (DOC).

Early Friday, the now-59-year-old Renton man was arrested.

He’s been charged with 11 DUIs since.

The “Buy American and Hire American” order directs U.S. agencies to propose rules

The tech industry has long said it relies

H-1B order may benefit local tech companies

Trump seeks to tighten rules

Changes could mean more visas for major industry leaders and founders for outsourcing firms

By JESSICA LEE

The Seattle Times staff reporter

H-1B visas are hot tickets for top tech talent.

It does signal tighter enforcement of visa adjudication abroad, but that may end up working in favor of local tech companies.

For dinner in minutes, use salsa to add heat

Four tips Dorothy Downes, who commutes from Skagit County to Seattle, plays the

Seattle Tech companies stand to benefit from tightened enforcement of immigration laws.

The “Buy American and Hire American” order signed by Trump will put pressure on the tech industry.

The tech industry is trying to prevent visa changes.

Seattle Times

Western Washington University

Dorothy Downes, a registered nurse.

The state Department of Corrections (DOC).

Early Friday, the now-59-year-old Renton man was arrested.

He’s been charged with 11 DUIs since.

The “Buy American and Hire American” order directs U.S. agencies to propose rules

The tech industry has long said it relies

H-1B order may benefit local tech companies

Trump seeks to tighten rules

Changes could mean more visas for major industry leaders and founders for outsourcing firms