‘Confused and scared’
Under pressure to prescribe fewer opioids, doctors struggle to ease patients’ pain, prevent overdoses and avoid risking their practices.

Dr. Lucinda Grande, a family medicine physician in Lacey, spars with Donna, 80, who uses opioids to relieve arthritis pain in her spine, made worse by a recent fall. Although Donna put her pain level at 8 out of 10, she was “pretty perky,” which encouraged the doctor.

Dr. Lucinda Grande, a family medicine physician in Lacey, spars with Donna, 80, who uses opioids to relieve arthritis pain in her spine, made worse by a recent fall. Although Donna put her pain level at 8 out of 10, she was “pretty perky,” which encouraged the doctor.

Dr. Lucinda Grande, a family medicine physician in Lacey, spars with Donna, 80, who uses opioids to relieve arthritis pain in her spine, made worse by a recent fall. Although Donna put her pain level at 8 out of 10, she was “pretty perky,” which encouraged the doctor.