SPD has seized 43 guns from people deemed to be a danger

EXCLUSIVE: SPD takes guns from people deemed to be a danger

By STEVE MILETICH / The Seattle Times staff reporter

A man threatening to kill people in a residential building

Mayor proposes law to make owners lock up guns

Calls for humane slaughter might run into resistance from animal-welfare advocates.

RESEARCHERS PUSH BACK

Fish feel pain.

The idea that fish suffer runs counter to almost everything Americans have been taught about marine life. Fish lack any "conscience" that allows them to feel pain, and are not guided by emotions like guilt.

Scientists say fish feel pain. What does that mean for commercial fishing?

RESEARCHERS PUSH BACK

Fish feel pain.

The idea that fish suffer runs counter to almost everything Americans have been taught about marine life. Fish lack any "conscience" that allows them to feel pain, and are not guided by emotions like guilt.

Scientists say fish feel pain. What does that mean for commercial fishing?

Researchers push back on sentiment that fish feel pain

Calls for humane slaughter might run into resistance from animal-welfare advocates.

RESEARCHERS PUSH BACK

Fish feel pain.

The idea that fish suffer runs counter to almost everything Americans have been taught about marine life. Fish lack any "conscience" that allows them to feel pain, and are not guided by emotions like guilt.

Scientists say fish feel pain. What does that mean for commercial fishing?

RESEARCHERS PUSH BACK

Fish feel pain.

The idea that fish suffer runs counter to almost everything Americans have been taught about marine life. Fish lack any "conscience" that allows them to feel pain, and are not guided by emotions like guilt.

Scientists say fish feel pain. What does that mean for commercial fishing?

RESEARCHERS PUSH BACK

Fish feel pain.

The idea that fish suffer runs counter to almost everything Americans have been taught about marine life. Fish lack any "conscience" that allows them to feel pain, and are not guided by emotions like guilt.

Scientists say fish feel pain. What does that mean for commercial fishing?

Researchers push back on sentiment that fish feel pain

Calls for humane slaughter might run into resistance from animal-welfare advocates.

RESEARCHERS PUSH BACK

Fish feel pain.

The idea that fish suffer runs counter to almost everything Americans have been taught about marine life. Fish lack any "conscience" that allows them to feel pain, and are not guided by emotions like guilt.

Scientists say fish feel pain. What does that mean for commercial fishing?

RESEARCHERS PUSH BACK

Fish feel pain.

The idea that fish suffer runs counter to almost everything Americans have been taught about marine life. Fish lack any "conscience" that allows them to feel pain, and are not guided by emotions like guilt.

Scientists say fish feel pain. What does that mean for commercial fishing?

Scientists say fish feel pain. What does that mean for commercial fishing?

RESEARCHERS PUSH BACK

Fish feel pain.

The idea that fish suffer runs counter to almost everything Americans have been taught about marine life. Fish lack any "conscience" that allows them to feel pain, and are not guided by emotions like guilt.

Scientists say fish feel pain. What does that mean for commercial fishing?

RESEARCHERS PUSH BACK

Fish feel pain.

The idea that fish suffer runs counter to almost everything Americans have been taught about marine life. Fish lack any "conscience" that allows them to feel pain, and are not guided by emotions like guilt.

Scientists say fish feel pain. What does that mean for commercial fishing?

RESEARCHERS PUSH BACK

Fish feel pain.

The idea that fish suffer runs counter to almost everything Americans have been taught about marine life. Fish lack any "conscience" that allows them to feel pain, and are not guided by emotions like guilt.

Scientists say fish feel pain. What does that mean for commercial fishing?

RESEARCHERS PUSH BACK

Fish feel pain.

The idea that fish suffer runs counter to almost everything Americans have been taught about marine life. Fish lack any "conscience" that allows them to feel pain, and are not guided by emotions like guilt.

Scientists say fish feel pain. What does that mean for commercial fishing?

Scientists say fish feel pain. What does that mean for commercial fishing?

RESEARCHERS PUSH BACK

Fish feel pain.

The idea that fish suffer runs counter to almost everything Americans have been taught about marine life. Fish lack any "conscience" that allows them to feel pain, and are not guided by emotions like guilt.

Scientists say fish feel pain. What does that mean for commercial fishing?

RESEARCHERS PUSH BACK

Fish feel pain.

The idea that fish suffer runs counter to almost everything Americans have been taught about marine life. Fish lack any "conscience" that allows them to feel pain, and are not guided by emotions like guilt.

Scientists say fish feel pain. What does that mean for commercial fishing?

RESEARCHERS PUSH BACK

Fish feel pain.

The idea that fish suffer runs counter to almost everything Americans have been taught about marine life. Fish lack any "conscience" that allows them to feel pain, and are not guided by emotions like guilt.

Scientists say fish feel pain. What does that mean for commercial fishing?

RESEARCHERS PUSH BACK

Fish feel pain.

The idea that fish suffer runs counter to almost everything Americans have been taught about marine life. Fish lack any "conscience" that allows them to feel pain, and are not guided by emotions like guilt.

Scientists say fish feel pain. What does that mean for commercial fishing?

RESEARCHERS PUSH BACK

Fish feel pain.

The idea that fish suffer runs counter to almost everything Americans have been taught about marine life. Fish lack any "conscience" that allows them to feel pain, and are not guided by emotions like guilt.

Scientists say fish feel pain. What does that mean for commercial fishing?