How popular are Uber, Lyft in Seattle?

Ridership reports show trips are heavily concentrated in the city’s downtown neighborhoods. Rider popularity is far greater than it was in the beginning of 2015, the first full quarter that the companies reported data to the city. Every day in the Seattle area, Uber and Lyft provide more rides than taxis ever did.

The ride-hailing services have grown rapidly and steadily since the companies filed with the city to receive their permits in 2013, according to ridership reports. Uber and Lyft carry 91,000 people a day in Seattle area, sixth highest among the 50 largest metro areas, and more than 10 percentage points higher than the U.S. average of 45 percent. While that’s just a fraction of how many people use public transportation system. That’s certainly a contributing factor. And Uber and Lyft have grown extraordinarily quickly — Church is more than five times larger than it was at the beginning of 2015, the first full quarter that the company reported data to the city. The two ride-hailing giants have merged into a single company service.

And Uber and Lyft have grown extraordinarily quickly — Church is more than five times larger than it was at the beginning of 2015, the first full quarter that the company reported data to the city. The two ride-hailing giants have merged into a single company service.

While that was the worst year for the transportation system. That’s certainly a contributing factor. And Uber and Lyft have grown extraordinarily quickly — Church is more than five times larger than it was at the beginning of 2015, the first full quarter that the company reported data to the city. The two ride-hailing giants have merged into a single company service.

While that was the worst year for the transportation system. That’s certainly a contributing factor. And Uber and Lyft have grown extraordinarily quickly — Church is more than five times larger than it was at the beginning of 2015, the first full quarter that the company reported data to the city. The two ride-hailing giants have merged into a single company service.

While that was the worst year for the transportation system. That’s certainly a contributing factor. And Uber and Lyft have grown extraordinarily quickly — Church is more than five times larger than it was at the beginning of 2015, the first full quarter that the company reported data to the city. The two ride-hailing giants have merged into a single company service.