CONSERVATIVES WANT COVERAGE REQUIREMENTS KILLED

IN WASHINGTON — Trump administration officials and lawmakers are scrambling to sway health-bill opponents as the White House and Senate Republican leaders search for votes on a repeal-and-replace measure to replace the Affordable Care Act.

The Trump administration is preparing to roll out a plan that could include tax credits for people who purchase insurance on the private market. The plan would also include provisions to help people with pre-existing conditions.

The House of Representatives is expected to vote on the bill this week, and Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) has said he hopes to bring it to the floor for a vote as soon as possible.

The bill would end the individual mandate, which requires most Americans to have health insurance or pay a fine. It would also repeal the law's taxes on health insurance providers and medical devices.

The lawmakers are facing a tough road as they try to find enough votes to pass the bill.

In an interview with The Associated Press, House Majority Whip Steve Scalise (R-La.) said the bill would make health care more affordable for Americans.

“People are tired of high premiums and deductibles,” Scalise said. “This bill is going to put money back in their pockets.”

But Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) said the bill would be a disaster for millions of Americans.

“People are going to lose their coverage,” Schumer said.

The bill is expected to face a tough fight in the Senate as well.

The White House and Senate Republican leaders are seeking to bring the bill to the floor next week, but they may need some time to work out differences between the two chambers.

In the House, a group of moderate Republicans has urged their colleagues to slow down and work on the bill.

The bill is expected to attract strong opposition from Democrats, who say it would lead to job losses and higher premiums for many Americans.

In the Senate, a number of moderate Republicans have said they would support the bill, but they will need to work with Democrats to find a compromise.

The bill is expected to face a tough road in the Senate as well, with many Democrats and some moderates saying they would likely vote against it.

The lawmakers are facing a tough road as they try to find enough votes to pass the bill.

In an interview with The Associated Press, House Majority Whip Steve Scalise (R-La.) said the bill would make health care more affordable for Americans.

“People are tired of high premiums and deductibles,” Scalise said. “This bill is going to put money back in their pockets.”

But Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) said the bill would be a disaster for millions of Americans.

“People are going to lose their coverage,” Schumer said.

The bill is expected to face a tough fight in the Senate as well.

The White House and Senate Republican leaders are seeking to bring the bill to the floor next week, but they may need some time to work out differences between the two chambers.

In the House, a group of moderate Republicans has urged their colleagues to slow down and work on the bill.

The bill is expected to attract strong opposition from Democrats, who say it would lead to job losses and higher premiums for many Americans.

In the Senate, a number of moderate Republicans have said they would support the bill, but they will need to work with Democrats to find a compromise.

The bill is expected to face a tough road in the Senate as well, with many Democrats and some moderates saying they would likely vote against it.