Trump in Britain: short, busy stop

Migrants’ grim warning of why they seek asylum

DEATH THREATS, INJURIES CAREFULLY DOCUMENTED

Evidence brought to border aims to bolster their cases

MARGARET CAMPBELL — An MS-13 gang member left his Texas home in search of a cellphone demanding that she turn over her teenage boy. If she refused, he said, the gang would demand her brother’s blood.

“T’m going to walk you finger down this road. You are going to lose your son,” Campbell said. “You are going to lose your brother. I’m going to burn your house down. I’m going to rip your head out,” she said, referring to a message that had been sent.

The family soon fled Guatemala and sought sanctuary in the United States. The South Texas Family Support Center is among the groups that help migrants, but they are sometimes all that they have.

In a stuning reversal, the San Antonio, Texas, police chief said he was “shocked” by last week’s killing and immediately withdrew his application to lead the San Antonio Police Department (The Associated Press)

Carmen Best, interim police chief in Seattle, issued a stern warning to migrants who are expected to cross the border with the Trump administration.

“T don’t like threats, nor do I like violence,” Best said in a statement broadcast on the Seattle police department’s social media accounts.

Best said she was “shocked” by the shooting, which left a 27-year-old man dead in the city of El Paso.

She called on migrants to avoid violence and not to bring firearms to the border.

“I have watched the violence in movies and on television,” Best said.

“I don’t like it, nor do I want to see it in our country.”
