For some teachers, new state rules mean big raises

With nearly $1 billion in new funding, some school districts have offered teachers double-digit pay hikes. But other districts say lawmakers intended to cap salaries.

Members of the Kent Education Association (KEA) went on strike at the Kent School District approximately lunch hour last week. The strike rules an teacher pay have some districts upping to double-digit raises while others struggle to keep up. Kent is among the districts where officials argue the area's new funding formulas still disadvantages them.

Washington housing market cools

For the first time in a year, Washington is seeing the first sign of a housing market cooling in the Seattle area, according to CoreLogic. Home price growth was still strong, but the numbers show a slightly slower pace.
