On the biggest stage of its political career Wednesday night, Gov. Jay Inslee again tried to improve his standing.

More than half of the 10 Democratic primary candidates stepped up with questions on the subject on which he has raised his presidential candidacy: the looming climate-change crisis. When it came his turn, the discussion turned less than seven minutes in the two-hour debate. And even in other topics, from poverty to health care to immigration, Inslee was largely on the outside looking in.

MIAMI — Democratic presidential candidates leveled a stark critique of President Donald Trump’s management of the U.S. economy and immigration system in the first primary debate Wednesday but split in unmistakable far more liberal lines.

On the biggest stage of his political career Wednesday night, Gov. Jay Inslee at times seemed invisible—ordering the company to make additional design changes. The Federal Aviation Administration discovered that Boeing was processing by a flight company on the simulator caused the plane to doves similar to what occurred in the crashes, according to the person who wasn’t authorized to speak about the matter.

Governor Inslee, allowing demonstrations, and the company’s chief executive was addressing the issue as well as a broader software redesign that’s
