At Florida high school, ‘a horrible day for us’

AT LEAST 17 DEAD; GUNMAN DREW STUDENTS OUT WITH FIRE ALARM

Seattle panel closing in on plan to fund homeless aid with a business ‘head tax’

Seattle Times reporter

Supporters and opponents agree the council will almost certainly allocate the money to combat homelessness. Even how much money the tax would raise is up in the air, and the details will be sorted out in coming months. A version of the tax almost was approved last year, but the council narrowly voted for more process instead, putting the issue to a panel of citizen and experts. That move put the idea on the political backburner, but not for long, because the council vowed to revamp it with recommendations from the community task force and adopt a plan this year. A version of the tax likely will be rejected, but the council tasked must make significant
