

Dear Mr. Berens,

7/11/05

I recently received your letter notifying me of your interest. I'm surprised, at any point, in that anyone would want to know what makes a man become the monster in the closet.

I'm not very good at expressing things nor do I know what exactly you would like to know or understand. I'm really not much of a writer, but perhaps your right, that somehow someone can be helped.

First of all, I don't wish to mix words. I knew I was guilty from the moment it all happened. I wanted to change it, I wanted to say I was sorry, I knew that I had to tell the truth. I continue to say that there are no excuses. I can't say that my mother or mother are at fault or that life was just too hard. Those are rationalizations.

The truth is that I made decisions. I never started out with plans to hurt that innocent child. I grew up helping others and worked for many years as a nursing assistant. I moved into registered nursing as a natural growing extension of my desire, no need to help others. I felt that my value came from what I could give and I often gave until there was nothing left. I frequently worked with little sleep, making my way through 100-90 hours a week of mixed shifts. At some point my boundaries became ~~unclear~~<sup>unclar</sup>. Nursing, in itself is an intimate interaction with those you care for. Exhaustion, frustrations, and personal struggles came together in a destructive act that I can't take back and will never be able to pay for. I don't blame society for hating me and what I did. I can't even imagine what I would do if my own children were hurt in this way. Many would say that's it to life or + a long enough sentence. I know that my family suffers in my absence and dream of my home coming, I know that no matter what happens, I will carry the weight of my actions for life. If I can be of assistance I will try, though I'm not sure what I can do.

I am scheduled to transfer to Shelton on Thursday the fourteenth of July. If you need to contact me, you can connect with me there.

As I said before, I'm not sure how much I can really help. If this can somehow help me repay in part the debt I owe for the damage I've caused,
I will be thankful.

Sincerely,
Raymond Hughes.
